

2nd Commonwealth Conference on Youth Work 'Engaging Young People in Nation Building: The Youth Worker's Role'

Theme - 'Engaging Young People in Nation Building: The Youth Worker's Role.'

What is the theme about?

Youth work should not be seen in isolation. Youth workers play a mediatory role between young people and national development by supporting the channelling of youth empowerment to sustained national and global development efforts. Youth Work plays a key role in that it creates conditions for enabling and empowering young citizens, and in turn impacts on a country's social, economic, political and environmental success.

Across many states of the Commonwealth there is a youth bulge. This demographic dividend can be unleashed and utilised to make significant strides in development, and youth workers play a critical role in that.

Within this context, the theme also advances the Commonwealth values of gender equity, inclusion, peace, development, human rights and democracy as key tenets that determine meaningful nation-building. The conference will see discussions on the youth worker's role in moving towards these democratic and participatory ideals in member states.

Key questions that will be discussed are:

- Is the impact of youth work being strategically thought of in terms of contributions to national and global development?
- Why should countries invest in youth work? What evidence exists that shows linkages between youth work successes and national development? Can there be national development without targeted youth development? What have been the contributions of professional youth workers to national and global development?
- What youth work theory and practice exists to support this linkage?
- What mechanisms exist in policy that create the space for youth workers to contribute directly to nation-building?
